

About MiCBT (Mindfulness Therapy)

Manage stress and take charge of your life

MiCBT

MiCBT (Mindfulness-integrated-Cognitive Behaviour Therapy) is a therapy offered by qualified MiCBT therapists to clients experiencing mild to severe stress. MiCBT is evidence-based. It assists serious conditions such as addiction, anxiety, depression, panic, phobia, trauma and post-traumatic stress. It also helps with the ordinary stresses of life that most people experience. MiCBT is therefore suitable for most people. It can be taught individually or in small groups of 6-8 people.

Mindfulness

Mindfulness is the practice of staying in the present moment and accepting your experiences without negative or unpleasant reactions. By not being attached to or reactive to our experiences, we deal with them more effectively. We develop qualities of equanimity, compassion and kindness.

Cognitive Behaviour Therapy (CBT)

CBT, derived from Socratic questioning, is used to explore incorrect and damaging beliefs. Often wrongly held beliefs lie behind our distress. We learn how to replace them with more accurate ones. As your Philosophical Counsellor, I have the extra resources of Philosophy to aid this process.

MiCBT - what to expect

MiCBT is delivered in 9 weekly sessions. Prior to starting, you attend a preliminary session to complete brief assessments and ensure that the course is right for you. To ensure progress, you set goals, which are rated before and after. You learn skills at each session and carry out activities between sessions. Links to guided meditations help you to learn them so that you can carry them out by yourself at any time. Feedback, discussion and guidance ensure your progress and success.

Client Commitment

Essential to the MiCBT's success is your commitment to attend all sessions and practice Mindfulness meditation for 30-minutes twice daily. To change long-lived habits requires a daily, dedicated commitment. What you gain from the course is measured by what you put into it.

You are changing habits of a lifetime and learning to respond more positively to life's difficulties. While I will work with you to the best of my ability to teach you effective skills, the ability to change and be successful is YOURS. No matter where you are at, you have the capacity within you!

If you are experiencing distress from either a recent or a long-term problem, give MiCBT a try and get your life back. Being happy and positive is much better for your general health and life satisfaction than being anxious, stressed and unhappy. Get in touch with me below to find out more.
